

CLAIMS

1. This invention provides an effective and electricity saving means for heating a fluid particularly water for industrial and/or domestic purposes.

2. If a current regulator is added to the heating element, this invention provides a method to continuously heat up a fluid particularly water to a specific temperature for a specified flowrate.